Creator Information: Office of Counsel to the President

The purpose of the White House Office of Counsel to the President was to provide legal advice to the President and the White House staff. It also acted as liaison to the Department of Justice and to the legal counsels of various government agencies. It dealt with ethical matters, conflicts of interest, and security clearances concerning Presidential appointees and White House staff. It provided legal advice on the President's official and personal legal affairs, legislation, and Supreme Court cases. It also was involved in the coordination of appointments to the federal judiciary. The Counsel's Office staff is comprised of lawyers plus clerical and administrative personnel. Detailees, consultants, and interns increased the size of the office to varying levels throughout the administration.

The White House Office of Counsel to the President was headed by Atlanta lawyer Robert J. Lipshutz from January 1977 until his resignation effective at the end of September 1979. Washington attorney Lloyd N. Cutler succeeded Lipshutz on October 1, 1979 and served for the remainder of the administration. Additional information
